The city of San Antonio isn't going to find out how much it will lose in taxes in 2017 until late next year. The reasons are twofold: a $1.4 million budget deficit and ongoing economic uncertainty. "The gap that we're in now is one that's really going to dictate what happens in the coming years," Mayor Ron Nirenberg said. The city budget forecasted a $2.5 million shortfall for the current fiscal year that began July 1. The deficit was a consequence of revenue sources that fell short of estimates. By the time 2017 begins, the city is expected to have to contend with an estimated $1.2 million deficit. Nirenberg wants a nine-member council to stick to a "no surprises" approach with him and other officials. Councilman Diego Bernal said he hasn't been surprised by any budget maneuvering over the past year and a half. But Bernal said he would like to know more specifics of how the city's current situation came about. He said the recent budget was approved and voted on by the entire council. He said he would like to know how the two budget scenarios diverged. "We're not in the middle of the process of a new fiscal year," Bernal said. "There were known deficits that we projected." Councilman Roberto Treviño said he and his colleagues want the city to identify the causes of revenue loss and examine the consequences of those decisions. "We're not pointing fingers, but if we don't have a good understanding of what happened, how can we be sure to make good decisions going forward?" Treviño said. The city's chief financial officer, Tom Jackson, said the budget process will take an unexpected turn because of the city's uncertain economic situation. "If we want to do the long-term planning and budgeting that we are trying to do now, we have to be aware that revenue streams may not continue to be the same as we've budgeted them in the past," he said. Jackson said he's concerned about the city's ability to keep expenditures at 2d92ce491b
