References Category:Chemical softwareComputerized tomography evaluation of superior vena cava syndrome. To assess the use of computed tomography for the diagnosis and monitoring of patients with superior vena cava syndrome. We conducted a retrospective study of eight patients who had acute, subacute, or chronic superior vena cava syndrome confirmed by surgical exploration, ligation, or intravascular shunting. The computed tomography images were analyzed and the patients were staged according to severity and growth of the mass lesion. Staging was determined by use of a scale in which 0 = no mass lesion, 1 = mass less than 2 cm in greatest diameter, 2 = mass from 2 to 5 cm, 3 = mass greater than 5 cm, and 4 = mass larger than 10 cm. A computed tomography evaluation of the initial computed tomography study and follow-up studies within a six-month period were made and compared. Eight patients with a mean age of 39 years (range, 14 to 71 years) were analyzed. Patients presented with a plethora (n = 7), venous ulcer (n = 5), or pitting edema (n = 5).
