The voice of the characters as well as the voice actors play a big role in defining the different characters and personalities, which in turn will determine the behavior of the person. The ambiance of the voice cast as well as the ambiance of the recording studio affects the listener's perception of an accent or sound. The characters' personality affects the way they sound. The script of the recording itself, along with the mood of the studio and the environment in which the recording took place, affect the sound of the recording. In addition, recordings are often marred with ambient noises and background music, such as music played in the recording studio, and recording equipment makes sounds as part of its operation. It is important to keep in mind that the meaning of a specific sound is governed by the context in which it was recorded, and the recording equipment used to make the sound. For example, the sound of a typewriter could be the sound of a computer. The quality of the recording affects the type of sound that is made, such as monophonic sounds like words or music, or polyphonic sounds like the human voice. The sound of the recording is affected by the length of the recording itself, and the sound fades over time depending on the length of the recording. For instance, a short audio file might have a sound intensity that is higher than that of a longer audio file. The sound intensity of an audio file is affected by the overall volume of the recording. For instance, if an audio clip is played on a small device, such as a smartphone, the sound intensity could be lower than on a large device, such as a smart TV or a computer monitor. The length of the recording is also affected by the recording equipment, and the recording equipment affects the volume of the sound. For instance, if a short song is played on a wind instrument such as a flute, the volume of the sound of the flute would be higher than that of a long song. The following table contains a list of types of sound. Sound can be either monophonic or polyphonic. The example of the voice is the sound of a person speaking, and the sound of a piano is an example of a monophonic sound, whereas the sound of a chord is an example of a polyphonic sound. In general, monophonic sounds are more accurate, and have less background sounds than polyphonic sounds. Many of the sounds that are seen on digital audio and video recording devices
