Strongly enhanced affinity of plasmid DNA to protein nanoparticles in aqueous solution. Protein nanoparticles have been prepared as effective and biocompatible vectors for intracellular delivery of genes and DNA. To achieve high efficiency of gene transfection, it is desired to load the gene onto the protein nanoparticles with strong binding affinity. Here, we demonstrate aqueous dispersion of protein nanoparticles and their strong affinity to plasmid DNA. We prepare protein nanoparticles by drying the aqueous dispersions of human serum albumin and bovine serum albumin and introduce complementary binding sequences to both ends of the plasmid DNA. These nanoparticles do not dissociate from plasmid DNA even when the particle concentrations are greater than the critical micelle concentration (cmc). The interparticle cross-linking within the stable nanoparticle dispersion reduces the physical instability of protein nanoparticles and makes them form high-density nanoparticle arrays without coalescence in aqueous solution. The strong binding affinity between the plasmid DNA and protein nanoparticles enhances the efficiency of gene transfection and ensures effective in vivo gene expression. The protein nanoparticles used in this study have potential to become effective vectors for in vivo gene transfer.

Election 2012: Obama and Romney battle for control of House

File this under: What will they never admit is their best bet. Much of the focus in the presidential campaign has been on the presidential race. In Congress, though, it's been in the Senate and in the House. In the Senate, both candidates are heavily favored to win. Four of the five states where the candidates have been campaigning are rated for the Democrats, and four of the states where they have been campaigning are rated for the Republicans. The only exception to that is Indiana, which is rated as "toss-up." That is a relatively rare occurrence. During the past half-century, only seven of the 18 Senate elections have been rated as "toss-up." But here's the interesting thing: The Senate ratings hold true when we eliminate the "toss-up" Indiana election from the calculation. That means the election in Indiana is a key factor in

Nov 22, 2013 The concept of karma in the Gita has been misunderstood by many, due to their faith in the name of God. We should not believe in the God as a religious fanatic, God is the one who is Lord of all the creations, when they serve him they are acting according to their duties. They are self-realized soul. Lord is the creator of us and there is no God without us.
