As disclosed in U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,004,649, 4,096,915, 4,081,023 and 4,287,892, foldable chair and stool frames have heretofore been provided in which the legs of the frame are selectively foldable to provide a stowed condition or a deployed condition for supporting the frame above the ground or floor on which the frame is to be used. The frame is selectively foldable, for example, to provide a compact size for storage purposes, or to provide a broad range of adjustable sizes for supporting a wide variety of different body sizes and shapes. However, such foldable chairs and stools have generally required an extensive number of relatively complex movable parts, including pivotal joints, to achieve the various adjustable positions of the frame, and these parts have heretofore been quite difficult to operate and control. Moreover, when the frame is in the folded or stowed condition, the frame tends to be relatively unstable when the user is seated upon the chair or stool, or when the user is standing or walking on the frame, and the frame has been particularly difficult to stably support when the user is either in the seated or standing position. The present invention provides a foldable chair and stool frame which is selectively adjustable in two different directions, and which is readily operated and controlled to achieve the desired positions of the frame, which positions include an unfolded or extended condition for supporting the user in a seated or standing position, and a folded or collapsed condition for compact storage. The frame is particularly easy to operate to achieve the various desired positions of the frame, and the frame is also particularly stable and secure in the deployed condition, to support the user in either a seated or standing position. In a preferred embodiment, the foldable chair and stool frame comprises a frame having a front, a rear, first and second legs, and a seat member positioned between the legs, the frame being configured so as to be selectively folded along a first fold line which is positioned substantially in a horizontal plane parallel to the floor when the frame is in the unfolded or extended condition, and to be selectively folded
