I'm building an application where I have a couple of complicated jobs that I have queued and can be running while users are logged in. The problem is that I have a few workers in that application that only run on-demand (customers only come in when the system is working). So, if a customer comes in the queue and the job fails, the customer never actually sees the content. Instead, the customer is just added to the queue like so Queue::push('Job', ['job_name' => $job->name, 'options' => $this->options, 'key' => $this->key]); I'd really like to be able to have the job only be queued if it doesn't have any errors. If it fails, the job is cancelled (I think that's what the queue_cancel method does) and I can just remove the job from the queue. I've thought about modifying the jobs so that they have a default value like so: class CreateHost extends Job { 2d92ce491b
