It extends for from an interchange with the Taconic State Parkway in the Town of Shrub Hill to the Franklin County line, where it ends at an intersection with NY 22 in the Town of Franklin. The route is entirely a two-lane road through rural land, and while New York City is to the west, the western terminus is located roughly from the city. NY 930 connects to highways leading to Albany, Hudson and the New York State Thruway (I-87/I-90), and is designated as an east–west route because of the towns' east–west orientation. It is named for being the former route of U.S. Route 15. Route description NY 930 begins at an interchange with the Taconic State Parkway in the Town of Shrub Hill, located a short distance north of the Albany–Schenectady county line, just east of where State Route 29 (SR 29) ends. From this point, NY 930 begins to run in an east–west direction. It follows a two-lane undivided roadway through dense forest land, intersecting two unnamed access roads along its route. After, the road turns to the south and forms the border between the towns of Shrub Hill and Halfmoon; the route continues as Shrub Hill–Halfmoon Road and the state-maintained portion of Shrub Hill Road. South of the hamlet of Purdy, the road enters the town of Halfmoon, before crossing into the town of Franklin. Upon crossing into Franklin, NY 930 becomes Lost Road, a state-maintained road named for the historic Indian trails through the town. The surroundings along the road remain largely rural in nature, with houses and some local shops dotting the landscape. In the center of town, Lost Road intersects County Route 87 (CR 87). Past this junction, the state of New York gains a centerline and shifts to a north–south orientation, running parallel to the West Branch of the Beaverkill River. ba244e880a
