Charting the National Longitudinal Surveys: updating the chronology of race and ethnic change in the United States. Since the 1960s, surveys of Americans have reported dramatic declines in the proportions of nonwhites in the U.S. population. However, this literature has drawn disproportionately on data collected by only two projects, the National Longitudinal Survey of Youth and the National Survey of Families and Households. Through the use of several modern datasets, we present an updated chronology of race and ethnic change in the U.S. as drawn from six projects of the National Longitudinal Surveys (NLS). During this period, white and black populations declined much more slowly than white/non-Hispanic and Hispanic populations, and the gap in growth rates between those two groups increased to its peak, although the gap between those groups has been much smaller than the gap between whites/non-Hispanic and nonwhites. The timing of the major events in U.S. history were the most significant forces in the development of the modern United States. The accelerating white/non-Hispanic growth of the last third of the 19th century gave rise to the first Southern states and a national Democratic Party, while the considerable "white flight" from the industrializing Northern cities started the long period of nation-wide urbanization that lasted until 1970. As a result of demographic change, the racial and ethnic composition of the U.S. population has increasingly diverged from a policy based on equality and inclusion, although the precise effects of the new trends on policy are still poorly understood. A few years ago, one of my best friends, who is also a photographer, bought an Rolleicord camera that hadn't been used in years, and she got really into black-and-white photography. "Oh I love that camera, I used to use this camera," she would say, remembering back to the days when she used to take it out and take pictures of people, just to show it off. After she really got into black-and-white photography, and took lots of lovely photos, she realized how her old camera was one of the cameras that, when she used it in college, that actually changed how she took pictures. It wasn't one of those cameras that she would use to take a pretty picture, but it was a camera that she would use to take a pretty photo. Pretty? Yes, pretty. A pretty picture, like this one:

ESR2 is downregulated in malignant squamous epithelia by an androgen-responsive mechanism. Overexpression of the nuclear estrogen receptors ERalpha and ERbeta is often observed in human epidermal cancers, but the functional consequences of these ERs in tumors are unclear. The androgen receptor (AR) may also be involved in many cutaneous malignancies. In this study, we found that the levels of ERbeta and AR protein were reduced in primary and metastatic keratinocytes and squamous cell carcinoma tissue from human skin, in A431 human squamous carcinoma cells, and in the human epidermal keratinocyte cell line HaCaT by Northern and Western blotting. In contrast, the levels of ERalpha and AR protein were relatively constant among these cell types. In A431 cells, the levels of ERbeta mRNA and protein were downregulated by androgens, indicating that the decrease in ERbeta is caused by downregulation of ERbeta transcription. Finally, this downregulation of ERbeta by androgens was prevented by treatment with the general transcriptional inhibitor, DRB, indicating that it was dependent upon transcription, rather than stabilization of the mRNA. The mRNA levels of the estrogen receptors ERalpha, ERbeta, and ERgamma were measured in epidermal tumors of mice transplanted with HaCaT cells, and ERbeta mRNA levels were strongly downregulated in some ERbeta-positive tumors. These results indicate that reduced expression of ERbeta in human skin and in HaCaT cells contributes to androgen-dependent transformation of human keratinocytes, and that this transformation may involve an AR-dependent mechanism. } private static void RefreshDataGridView() { try { if (dataGridViewRows.Items.Count > 0) { var item = dataGridViewRows.Items[0]; if (item != null)
