Using the Workspace When you first launch Photoshop CC, you'll see the screen shown in Figure 2. Figure 2: The Photoshop Workspace. The Workspace contains the following: * _File_ : Holds items such as images and videos. * _File Menu_ : Provides access to different methods for controlling the items in the file space and the file itself. * _Edit_ : Provides access to tools for changing and manipulating the size and proportions of the image. * _Colors_ : Provides access to the Color Picker, which enables you to change the color of the image or of any portion of it. * _Layer Panel_ : Contains the layers you create. * _Image Size_ : Provides the tools to adjust your image size. * _View_ : Provides the tools to manipulate your viewing perspective for the active document. You'll find a variety of other tools listed here, as well as more space to use the various tools. You can launch Photoshop by pressing the blue Photoshop button at the lower-right side of the screen or by selecting the Photoshop icon from the Launchpad. It provides the same basic tools and options as the desktop version of Photoshop. You can also launch Photoshop using the Windows version of the software. It's stored in a.pxt file that sits in the My Pictures folder. You can then copy that file to another location, or create a shortcut on the desktop.

Over a million people have signed up to the Government's flu vaccination campaign, and it's yet to reach its target. Photo: RNZ / Richard Tindiller It was initially hoped the campaign would reach 30,000 people in the week before Christmas, but Health Minister David Clark told Morning Report this morning that the National Influenza Immunisation Programme had a shortfall of just 2,048 people. Mr Clark said those figures are based on responses from the Ministry of Health and the National Health Service (NHS), and as of this afternoon, the campaign had still not covered more than two-thirds of those targeted. In a video message posted this morning, Mr Clark said he was "absolutely determined" the campaign would reach its target and reminded people to get their flu jab. "I ask that we look at this last minute effort through the lens of what we could have done better earlier and we will do better in future. "We'll work with you. We'll get a better response than this this year. We'll do better next year and keep making those improvements." There are currently an estimated 11,000 confirmed cases of flu in New Zealand, and 26 are taking place every day - mostly in schools and nursing homes. According to the ministry, the most common strain circulating nationally is influenza A virus H3N2, which has been the dominant strain since 2000. In a couple of years flu vaccination can also stop the flu virus from spreading, so it's important for people to get their jab - and fast. "This is not about a temperature test. It's not about an insurance policy," Mr Clark said. "It's about a really serious and urgent public health campaign. The flu can kill people, and if you don't immunise yourself, your community, and your children - you can get seriously ill or even die." The National Influenza Immunisation Programme requires people to have a valid Medicare card to be eligible for the jab.
