The 2nd, 4th, and 8th cell divisions occur after the first meiotic division. The zygote develops into a multicellular organism called a zygotic embryo. The earliest zygote was a monosperm fertilized egg. The multicellular zygotic embryo contains one or more cleavage planes which separate the nuclear material. Dividing zygotes are called blastomeres and are collectively called blastomeres, from the Greek word βλαστός (blasthos, "divided"). Dividing blastomeres are called mitosis; after the last division, they are called multicellular blastomeres. After fertilization of one sperm and one egg by one of their nuclei, one multicellular blastomere will form a monosperm embryo. If it is fertilized by a second sperm, it will develop into a triploid zygote. If it is fertilized by one of the two eggs that were not fertilized, it will develop into a tetraploid zygote. A tetraploid zygote will develop either into a mon 09e8f5149f
