UNDERLYING FACTS: By his own admission, the child was injured when he was "unplugged" from his exotic car seat. [Appellant's brief at 23.] The child was in his car seat at approximately 8:30 in the evening, when the Appellant got home from work around 8:45 p.m., when she received a text message from someone stating that she needed to change the child's diaper because the child was hurting. The Appellant did not call anyone and she put the child in his car seat, pulled him out of his car seat, unbuckled the child, and carried him out of the house. The Appellant stated that she had to give the child a bath that night because the child was covered with urine and feces, and had bruises from falling. The child's father said that the Appellant was so concerned about the child's condition that she turned up the heat while the child was still in the car seat, causing the child to scream out in pain. The child was crying, and his skin felt hot to the touch. The Appellant stated that she had forgotten about the car seat. The Appellant was asked to explain why she had placed the child in the car seat in the first place, if she was not concerned about the child's injuries. Key Macro is a suite of key binding plugins for Vim and other text editors. The plugin is meant to be a lightweight and unobtrusive solution for key binding customization. It has no dependencies on any other Vim plugins, and is a complete solution in itself. When you type a key combination, Key Macro checks the current context (a set of current Vim buffers and commands), and if the combination is a common macro, it inserts the macro into the document, so that you can use it by just pressing the key combination again. You can try out Key Macro online, or download a standalone version for Vim. The latter can be downloaded from GitHub. Key Macro is extremely easy to use. Just install the plugin, put your custom mappings in a file that you can set your key bindings to, and you're ready to go. For more information, see: Key Macros are the way to go. I use them for music editing/muting, and the sliders for volume. What I'm trying to do is to search for an exact phrase, and then set the text to what I find. For example, if I search for "ambient" in the music I'm playing, I want the song to switch to the Ambient Mix in the Tracks page. It would be a lot of clicking, but i want to be able to search and just use the keyboard to select. So: Ctrl+F will be used to search for the search term Ctrl+K will select the results Ctrl+L will set the selected results to the selected track A: I've just recently found and use the Find Search and Replace plugin for vim. It provides the functionality to search for, find and replace text within a text file (with the help of the included NERD Commenter). You can set it up via the excellent pico.vim script that I've included in my vim starter kit. There are some nice tutorials out there for using it, some of which I've written. A: I've found this and this useful as well (for example, the second one for gvim). The former is a bit more complex, but you can configure a vim key binding to run a given script to 1d6a3396d6
