Evaluation of a Model to Predict Postanesthesia Cognitive Function. The effect of general anesthesia on cognition is well documented, but a systematic and validated method of predicting the effect of anesthesia on cognitive function has yet to be developed. This prospective study examined the association of general anesthesia on a measure of cognitive function in a cohort of patients undergoing elective knee or hip arthroplasty surgery. Patients were assessed at baseline, and at 4, 24, and 48 hours following surgery with the Word Lists Memory Test (WLMT). A linear regression model was built to predict WLMT performance by considering the effects of surgery, age, history of hypertension, history of diabetes, history of opioid use, and use of anesthetics. The model was accurate in predicting performance on the WLMT at 24 and 48 hours (area under the receiver operating characteristic curve of 0.87 [95% confidence interval: 0.76, 0.95] and 0.86 [95% confidence interval: 0.74, 0.94], respectively), but not at 4 hours following surgery. The ability to predict 24 and 48 hours after surgery suggests that this model has the potential to be useful in evaluating cognitive function following anesthesia.

Q: How to get unique values and not repetitions? I have a list of values and I want to get the unique ones: List list = new List() {"a", "b", "c", "a"};
